"You keep using that word. I do not think it means what you think it means." – Inigo Montoya, The Princess Bride It may be inconceivable for you to misuse a word, but a quick look around online reveals plenty of people doing it. And it's all too easy when we hear or see others use words incorrectly and parrot them without knowing it's wrong.

Statistics are supposed to make something easier to understand but when used in a misleading fashion can trick the casual observer into believing something other than what the data shows. That is, a misuse of statistics occurs when a statistical argument asserts a falsehood. In some cases, the misuse may be accidental. In others, it is purposeful and for the gain of the perpetrator.

Learned is the more common past tense and past participle of the verb learn. Learnt is a variant especially common outside North America. In British writing, for instance, it appears about once for every three instances of learned. In the U.S. and Canada, meanwhile, learnt appears only once for approximately every 500 instances of learned, and it's generally considered colloquial.

On Twitter, @that_angela pointed out a Calgary Herald story about wildfires that uses the prepositional phrase in affect. Here is the sentence: James Finstad with Alberta Health Services said its health advisory is still in affect. Now, before we all start guffawing into our sleeves, let's acknowledge that we understand perfectly well how this happened.
